NUMBER 9

Graduate's journey began at OCC

When Lynn Gray came to Olney Central College in 2005, she planned to earn her GED and complete an associate's degree. But, the Olney resident found the more she learned, the more she wanted to continue her studies.

Gray received not one, but two associate's degrees at OCC and then transferred to Indiana State University in Terre Haute, where she earned a bachelor's degree in criminology. She is currently pursuing both a master's degree in criminology at ISU and a master's of online teaching certificate through the University of Illinois in Springfield.

"I thought I was just going for a two-year degree," Gray said. "I didn't expect to earn a bachelor's or a master's degree, but it has been an exciting ride. I never expected to go this far or accomplish what I have."

Gray was a senior when she had to leave high school due to serious family matters and was needed at home. Over the next 20 years, she held a variety of secretarial and managerial jobs and even worked at a radio station.

"I had been able to support myself, but I was at the point where I knew I needed to update my education," Gray said. "My skills were limited and technology was changing. I wanted to finish a degree, but I knew I had to get my GED first."

Gray said the prospect of returning to the classroom at age 44 was overwhelming.

"There is nothing more frightening than coming back to school and not knowing what to expect," she said. "I was scared that I was older and that I might not be able to do this, but I surprised myself. The atmosphere at OCC is so welcoming to non-traditional students like me.

"Everyone is so encouraging," she added. "They are

OCC offers new Health Care Bridge Program

Olney Central College is introducing a new program designed to help individuals with low basic skills enter a health care certificate or degree program.

Learning Skills Center Director Donita Kaare said OCC and Frontier Community College began offering the new Health Care Bridge Program in March. The 10-week course focuses on contextualized instruction, career development and transition services.

To qualify, individuals must need to complete a GED or have reading skills that are between the sixth- and ninth-grade levels. Kaare said the free course addresses basic reading, math and language skills while using health care knowledge and vocabulary.

"During the classes, students will be learning the skills they need to pass the GED and at the same time they will be learning about health care," Kaare added. "It will provide them with better preparation for postsecondary education."

The goal is to put individuals on a career path to employment in high-demand, middle- and high-skilled jobs.

"We hope it also will motivate the students to stay in school and go on to postsecondary education or to get a job," Kaare said. "We're building a better student for health care programs and we're building a better employee for health care facilities. We can take a student who didn't have academic skills and get them prepared. This is something we can do to improve their lives and chances for employment."

Illinois Eastern Community Colleges is one of four adult education providers in fiscal year 2013 selected by the state to participate in the pilot program. In preparation, IECC's bridge team has undergone training since July.

As a 2013 participant, next year the IECC team will mentor other colleges as they work to implement their own bridge programs.

Kaare said OCC and FCC chose to focus on health care for several reasons.

"We wanted to develop a bridge based on where the jobs are in this area and they are in health care," Kaare said. "Also, our students are

SAN helps ensure students have meals on the weekends

Olney Central College's Student Advantage Network Club recently partnered with a local volunteer organization to ensure area students have adequate meals on the weekends.

SAN Academic Counselor Jennifer Stroughmatt said the OCC students filled 101 bags with food provided by the Master's Hands Inc., of Olney. The shelf-stable items included breakfast, lunch and dinner staples as well as two snacks.

SAN members delivered the bags to the East and West Richland schools for distribution to designated students.

Stroughmatt said the SAN Club participates in a variety of community service projects.

"The students enjoy helping others in the community and are always looking for ways to give back," she said.

OCC's Student Advantage Network is a federally funded project, which helps participants stay in college, graduate and successfully transfer to a four-year college or university.

SAN offers a full range of services to students including academic assessment, personalized academic advisement, transfer assistance, scholarship assistance, tutoring, career counseling, peer mentoring, campus visits and cultural trips. It also assists students with orientation and adjustment to college life, development of effective study skills, personal development and career exploration.

Welding and Cutting Open House May 3

The Olney Central College Welding and Cutting Program will host an open house on Friday, May 3.

Instructor Curtis Marshall said this is an opportunity for area residents to learn about the program and to view the new welding machines it acquired last fall.

Through its partnership with Lincoln Electric Co., the program added six V350 Pro Multi-Process Welders, five C300 Advanced Process Welders and one 225 Precision TIG Welder.

"Everyone is welcome to come check the program out," Marshall said. "We have some top of the line welders and we want to make everyone aware of it."

Lincoln Electric also is providing a VRTEX 360 Virtual Reality Welder for the open house.

"It's a high-tech piece of equipment that anyone can come in and use," Marshall said. "It can be used to simulate either pipe or structural welding."

The program recently acquired a Torchmate plasma cutter, which also will be on display. Students can use the accompanying software to create various designs and then cut them out at the plasma table.

"It's a great program and allows students to make decorative items and signs," Marshall said.

Area high school students are invited to attend the open house from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The event will be open to the general public from 2 to 7 p.m. Prizes will be given away during both sessions.

The OCC Welding and Cutting Program is located just west of the OCC Automotive Building on West St. John Street.

here to help you. No matter what I needed, there was always someone there to help. It is everyone, the instructors and the staff. Without the faculty and staff here, I probably wouldn't have gone as far as I have."

Gray completed her GED in December 2005 and enrolled in college classes the following spring. She graduated in May 2009 with both Administration of Justice and Crime Scene Technician associate's degrees.

After transferring to Indiana State, Gray continued to tutor both GED and college students at OCC. She also served as the OCC Learning Skills Center's Tutoring Coordinator and helped to establish the college's Tutoring Club. She continues to work with the club as its advisor.

Gray currently serves as an adjunct instructor for OCC's

Administration of Justice Program and teaches basic computer and math classes.

She also is a GED instructor at Frontier Community College in Fairfield.

"I really enjoy working with the students," Gray said. "It is a wonderful feeling helping them to succeed in reaching their goals. It is exciting to see them move on."

Gray especially enjoys teaching GED classes.

"I can share my story with the students and encourage them not just to earn a GED, but to continue on to college. I let them know that if I can do it, so can they."

Gray originally wanted to become a crime scene technician, but she changed her mind after working with the students.

"I discovered I have a real passion for teaching," she said. "It is something I never expected."

Gray plans to continue teaching in the area of criminology after completing her master's degree and is interested in developing online classes in the field.

"With online programs, people like me can complete their degrees without having to uproot themselves and their families," she said. "The online classes make a quality education more accessible."

Gray also would like to focus on the area of victimology. This specialized area of criminology focuses on victims and the efforts to make sure their rights are being met.

Gray said OCC made it possible to achieve her goals.

"OCC has been my home away from home," she said. "I received my education here and acquired employment. It is a great place to start your education."

interested in health care. They can complete their CNA training and get a job with just one semester of education.”

In addition to improving their academic skills, Kaare said the program provides career assessment and exploration along with career planning. Participants will complete career inventories and even take field trips to area health care facilities.

“Many students are not aware of all the job possibilities that exist in health care,” Kaare said. “We want to expose them to as many as possible.”

The bridge program recently provided an orientation meeting for its initial students.

“We talked about their goals and plans,” Kaare said. “We discovered that many of them see the bridge program as a ladder. They want to complete their CNA training so they can get a job and support themselves while they train to become an LPN or even an RN.”

As part of the bridge program, students also undergo a background check, fingerprinting, TB testing and CPR certification. All are required for those seeking health care degrees and certificates. The students are even introduced to HIPAA regulations.

Other services provided to bridge students include academic advising, tutoring and referrals to support services such as transportation and childcare. The LSC also assists students with enrolling in college, taking placement tests and applying for financial aid.

The health care bridge course meets for five hours on both Mondays and Wednesdays. As the program progresses, Kaare said the bridge team will evaluate the program and make changes as needed. Members are considering implementing a Manufacturing Bridge Program this fall.

For more information about the Health Care Bridge Program, contact Kaare or Melissa Sager at 395-7777 or send an e-mail to kaared@iecc.edu.

Having trouble sleeping? Massage Therapy can help

Sleep is an important aspect of health and well-being. Though there doesn't seem to be any magic number concerning the amount of sleep people require, getting too little is associated with a number of medical conditions, and can negatively impact a person's overall health.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, "Insufficient sleep is associated with a number of chronic diseases and conditions—such as diabetes, cardiovascular disease, obesity and depression—which threaten our nation's health. Notably, insufficient sleep is associated with the onset of these diseases and also poses important implications for their management and outcome."

Some recent research is helping shed light on how massage therapy can be used to help people who have difficulty sleeping.

One study of how massage therapy can benefit people with lower back pain and sleep disturbances found that the massage therapy group experienced less pain, depression, anxiety and sleep disturbance when compared to the group using only relaxation therapy. This study comprised 30 adults with low back pain with duration of at least six months. Randomly assigned to either massage therapy or relaxation therapy, each group had 30-minute sessions, twice a week for five weeks. On the first and last day of the five-week study, participants completed questionnaires and were assessed for range of motion.

Along with the benefits for depression, anxiety and sleep disturbance, the massage therapy group also showed improved trunk and pain flexion performance. A 2010 study investigated the effects of massage therapy for sleep quality on patients who had coronary artery bypass graft surgery. The study evaluated whether massage therapy would be effective in improving sleep quality in patients.

The 40 participants of the study were randomly assigned to a control group or massage therapy group following discharge from the intensive care unit.

For three nights, the massage therapy group received massage while the control group did not. The patients were evaluated the following morning using a visual analogue scale for pain in the chest, back and shoulders, as well as fatigue and sleep.

Interestingly, pain in the chest, shoulders and back decreased significantly for both groups from day 1 to day 3. The participants in the massage therapy group, however, had fewer complaints of fatigue on day 1 and day 2, as well as reporting a more effective sleep during all three days.

You can experience the benefits of Massage Therapy for yourself by taking advantage of the OCC Massage Therapy Program's clinicals.
